

Adriano Duque, holds PhDs in Romance Languages (UNC-Chapel Hill, 2004) and Classical Philology (U of Sevilla, 2017). He is an Associate Professor of Medieval Literature in the Department of Romance Languages and Literatures at Villanova University. He is the author of several essays on Political ideas in late Medieval Spain published in journals like La Corónica, Bulletin Hispanique or e-Humanista, and several studies on strategies of representation in Spanish Epic poetry published in the Journal of Medieval Iberian Studies, Philologia Hispalensis or the Mélanges de la Casa de Velázquez. In 2009 and in 2016 he was awarded two Fulbright fellowships to study female agency and rituals of shared veneration around the figure of John the Baptist in Syria and Morocco.