

Rachel Schine holds a PhD in Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations from the University of Chicago. She is presently a postdoctoral associate and instructor of Arabic literature at the University of Colorado, Boulder in the Department of Asian Languages and Civilizations. Her work focuses on pre-modern Arabic literature, with interests in orality and storytelling practices, gender/sexuality and race/race-making across genres. Her current research assesses the representations and literary functions of black heroes in the Arabic sīrahs, a corpus of chivalric legends first attested in the 12th century AD. She has published on topics relating to racialization, kinship, and motherhood in Arabic storytelling.
