

Kenneth Baxter Wolf is the John Sutton Miner Professor of History at Pomona College and a member of the Classics department, where he oversees the Late Antique-Medieval Studies (LAMS) program of the Claremont Colleges. His research interests divide between Christian views of Islam and the idea of Christian sanctity. He is the author of books on a wide variety of subjects including the “Martyrs of Córdoba,” the Normans of southern Italy, and St. Francis of Assisi. He is also a translator, having rendered a number of important medieval Latin texts into English, including, most recently, the works of Eulogius of Córdoba and The Indiculus luminosus of Paul Alvarus. He teaches courses on a range of topics, all related to the “history of mentalities” in a medieval Mediterranean context.
